

Abstract

The “Chosen Issues of Post-penitentiary Care of Released Criminal Offenders” bachelor thesis deals with the system of social services provided for the individuals released from prison. The system is viewed as an intersection of two main social intentions; elimination of criminal recidivism and social ingration of ex-inmates. These intentions are reflected in the states security and social policy. The author uses stakeholder analysis to inquire into the post-penitentiary care system. This way she defines relevant stakeholders, their basic aims and rate of interest, as well as the activities of various stakeholders and their influence of the clients’ situation. The basic categories of stakeholders are the service providers, their clients and other stakeholders influencing the clients and their situation. The more detailed categorization is based on the public service system. In terms of the stakeholder analysis and interviews with experts there are identified the basic problems the stakeholders have to face. The problems concern relationships among service providers, public opinion and measurability of post-penitentiary care achievements. The brief description of the problems is complemented by suggestions of their solutions or modulation of their impacts.
